

2020 ENTRY - PREPARING FOR THE NEXT ACADEMIC STEP

With no exams to revise for, no course work to finish and months before your university studies begin you may feel a bit lost...

Try to keep your mind active and focused. Think about how you can help ease yourself into the next phase in your education.

Going the extra mile will help prepare you for your academic studies, demonstrate and develop new skills, show how dedicated and passionate you are and help banish the lockdown boredom.

Remember to always stay safe and keep to the government guidelines.

Online learning

There are a variety of free, short online courses, webinars and projects you can do, specific to your chosen course - the internet is full of opportunities and options.

Volunteering

It's possible to volunteer in many ways from the safety of your home. Look for opportunities in your local area or contact an organisation of interest to you.

Be creative

Get involved in a project; on your own, with your household or with friends via video chat e.g. spending too much time watching Netflix? Why not write a review on the latest boxset you watch.

Extra reading

Extend your knowledge and prepare for your academic studies at university.

Stay in the know

Find out what the university and your chosen course are doing during lockdown. There may be something you can get involved with.

Virtual events

Visit virtual open days and taster sessions.

Get in touch

Contact the university and ask for advice.